

Day 4 work, shark, fireworks

Brian had to do a few conference calls in the morning, so we took the opportunity to sleep in a little bit before we set up beach camp.

It was a beautiful sunny day, so we spent most of the day in the water body surfing and also some time doing paddle ball on the beach. Reece built a sand castle. This sand is absolutely perfect for building stuff! Probably the high light for the afternoon was watching some boys fishing just a little way out from the beach. Before long they reeled in a small hammer head shark! I was witnessing it right in front of me and didn't take a picture! I guess I was too mesmerized. It created quite a stir, so the beach patrol asked them not to fish out there anymore. All the beaches are public here, so you see all kinds of people doing different things...running, biking, etc. this is a first for me seeing people in the ocean with fishing rods. It's very shallow so you can just walk out there. I think the shark was freaking people out and scaring them from swimming a bit. Late in the afternoon the thunder and lightning came in again which required us to clear the ocean. Off to the pool we went to play catch.

We got a few rounds of uno in before we ventured out for dinner. And of course Reece has her coffee shop going in full operation again. For dinner, We had reservations at Fish Camp which is a really cute place right on the water. Due to the rain, there was only indoor seating and a covered bar outside. Jake ordered crab legs which turned out to be Brian doing all the work to get the meat out! Reece tried fried shrimp and even though that didn't turn them into seafood lovers, I was proud of them for trying!! Brian and I shared a fried lobster tail for appetizer (yum!) and red snapper for dinner. It was very good but small portions for the price. The environment was really great. After the rain stopped we went out on the pier for some pictures. Morgan was instructing me what to do so she could put some good photos on Instagram. Drew was so happy to be chosen to be featured. Adorable! On Tuesday nights on the island they do fireworks and we got to see them right from the pier over the water. They were great! We played a few rounds of outdoor games—I was the all-time winner of connect 4. Finally, I won something.

Back at the hotel we got ready for bed and watched part of the All-Star game but apparently missed a lot of the main action!
